Not illustrated. 1848 Excerpt: .with paintings2 in the style already described in the Guise Palace, bearing the quaint legend over its antique lintel, in ornamental characters of a very early date: --1 Ante, vol. i. p. 113. HE. YT. THOLIS. OVERCVMMIS. Behind these lay several steep, narrow, and gloomy closes, containing the most singular ii t; i u -----j--T l. groups of huge, irregular, and diversified tenements that could well be conceived. H a crazy stunted little timber dwelling, black with age, and beyond it a pile of masonry rising story above story from some murky profound beyond, that left its chimneys scarcely rivalling those of its dwarfish neighbour after climbing thus far from their foundation in the depths below. One of these, which we have engraved under the name of The Haunted Close, is the same in which the worthy gentlewoman, the neighbour of Major Weir, beheld the spectral giantess vanish in a blaze of fire, as she returned down the West Bow at 1 Minor Antiquities. Information derived fifty years ago (1833) from a man who was then eighty years of age. Some curious fragments of this ceiling arc now in the collection of C. K. Sharpe, Esq. the witching hour of night. The close, for all its wretched degradation, which had won for it the savoury title it retained to the last, still preserved some remains of ancient grandeur, as appears in our view, where an ornamental building is introduced, which had probably formed the summer house of...
