So long ago as 1872 experiments were made in Liverpool with a very large number of marine engines (see Sir Frederick Bramwell s paper and Sir William Siemens presidential address in the Transactions of Mechanical Engineers for 1872), and it was shown that the average consumption of coal did not exceed 2 lb. per indicated horse-power per hour. Marine engines have no advantages which engines driving mechanical ventilators may not possess, and surely what was accomplished with marine engines many years ago ought to be possible with engines for mechanical ventilators now. And with engines working so economically how would Mr. Atkinson s figures come out? The mechanical ventilator would excel the furnace even in point of economy at any ordinary depth, whatever the upcast shaft temperature. There is nothing unreasonable in expecting a horse-power from 2 lb. of coal per hour. Indeed, Mr. E. A....
