The part played by the cortex in sensation is concerned with those physiological processes which underlie projection and discrimination. I have attempted to show that these activities fall into three groups; they are represented on the sensory side by appreciation of relationships in space, by appropriate reactions to stimuli of different intensities, and by recognition of the similarity and difference in test-objects of various weights and shapes. We saw reason to believe that these three aspects of cortical activity were not always affected uniformly, or in any constant relation to one another. In one case the spacial tests yielded normal results, in spite of considerable defects in the remaining aspects of sensation; whilst in some instances the tactile hairs, or in others the graduated weights, failed to show any abnormality. These are, however, extreme examples, but they demonstrate that the three aspects of sensibility cannot be equally represented in all parts of the sensory cortex. Even cases where the dissociation is less complete point in the same direction; for it is not uncommon to find that one group of tests shows a disturbance of sensibility in five digits, whilst another group reveals defects in one finger only. These three faculties might have stood to one another in some such relation of graduated complexity as that which we discovered for appreciation of tests in three-, two-, and one-dimensional space. The cortex is the organ for controlling and...
