Both pastors and evangelists were appointed by the Committee and held their office from them. In the next year, 1867, it was arranged that each church should elect for itself deacons to be entrusted with the care of secular things. Thus were the first steps taken towards the establishment of an independent, self-supporting, and self-governing Church. In this year, too, seven other ordinations took place, chiefly of assistant missionaries, men designed to share the growing burdens of the extensive districts now under the charge of the European missionaries, for the burden was growing to be a large one. In 1870 the Christian adherents numbered 30, 969, with 210 preachers, besides 161 schools and over 5000 scholars. In Pareychaley alone there were over 1000 Christian adherents. The number of church members or communicants was 2331. In 1868 the Rev. James Emlyn came to take charge of the Pareychaley district, and the Rev. S. Jones was transferred from Coimbatore to Nagercoil, there to take charge of the seminary from Mr Newport, and afterwards of the district. In 1873 Dr Thomson was appointed to the Neyoor medical mission, and at last began a chain of medical missionaries unbroken up to the present time. Dr Thomson was a man of singular devotion and earnestness, and simply lived in and for his work. He erected the second hospital at Neyoor, which was in reality a gift of the Maharajah. Dr Thomson says, I made a subscription list..
