If you please, make the shading a little heavier just there. So; that improves it. [While Lizzie continues drawing, Carroll moves off a little to look at books, c., in library. Wise. [Speaking outside] Come Lizzie [enters in muffler and gaiters, with riding-whip in hand], the horses are at the door, and we ve a fine afternoon for a run over in Jersey. [Observing Carroll]. [Aside]. My new clerk, by all that s wonderful. What can he be doing here, in my house, and alone with my daughter. Lizzie. Wait a moment, papa, and I ll let you see how much I have improved with good instruction. Wise. Oh! he s here giving lessons in drawing. [Aside]. He s no doubt some foreign scapegrace, come over to this country, to mend his fortunes and makes use of his accomplishments, to get inside of people s houses. Truly our houses are but little protection to us now-a-days. We have English burglars entering through the roof, Irish policemen in at the basement; and German, French, and Italian teachers of this and that thing, walking in by the hall door. Lizzie. There, papa, you ll say that is better than my school girl scratches, as you used to call my drawing [showing a sketch. Wise. Very good indeed my child, if you - Lizzie. If I did it all? I made every line; Mr. - why, I don t yet know his name - never made a stroke of this. Wise. It s very well done, and I ll have a frame carved expressly for it. [Aside.] One of my office people...
