Excerpt: . . . sent ambassadors to demand, in the names of their respective states, that Themistocles should be given up. Do not give up one to whom you have solemnly promised your protection. Themistocles felt that, since his being given up was demanded by the ambassadors of the Athenians and Lacedaemonians, he must provide for his own safety. I will inform the captain who and what I am, and promise him a great reward if he saves me. Themistocles prayed him not to give him up, for it was difficult, he said, to provide for his own safety. p After Themistocles was landed, the ship was carried by a violent storm to Naxus. Themistocles being landed, thanked the captain. I must perish if I land there. Ch. IX. 1 1. Distinguish between plerique and plurimi. Pref. 1, 7. --2.
