Not illustrated. 1898 Excerpt: .and petcock are opened at the same time, and both are kept open until all the milk has flowed out. Obviously, each horizontal inch of milk must contribute its proportion to a sample thus automatically taken, and even though the milk is not stirred, since all the cream clots are broken, the results are accurate. Their correctness has been shown by hundreds of experiments, some made by experiment stations in this and other states, and some by creameries. I freely admit that accurate samples may be taken in other ways, but I claim that there is less likelihood of error by the use of this method, and that it is greatly to be preferred to the usual insufficient stirring and dipping. 2. Correct Apparatus. The management should be able to assert that every piece of apparatus used in its dividend-making is accurate. Presumably the creamery scales...
