Not illustrated. 1897 Excerpt: . . . 26, 27, seem to be crowbars, as several were uniformly bent up at one end; these show then the only crowbars yet known from Egypt. The hoes, 28, 29, 30, are of the type well known in later Egyptian bronze, where the flat sheet of metal is wrapped round the handle. The axe, 31, is of the usual type; as are also the adze, 32, and knife, 33. The knife with a spur on it, 34, is a new form, the meaning of which is obscure. The mortise chisel, 35 and flat chisel, 36, are of the usual forms. The ebony cramp, 37, is a model of the wooden cramps used for linking together the stones of a building, and bears the cartouche with the title Neb taut. The two model corn grinders of yellow quartzite have the nefer signs and a border line painted on...
